Course Outline:

In an era of longevity and aging population, there is a greater demand and a high premium placed on improving the general well being and quality of life. Current statistics show a positive correlation between age and edentulism. Due to the predictable nature, successful outcomes and sound scientific basis of implant therapy; increasing number of patients' are opting for dental implants as a viable option to replace their missing dentition. As a result, increasing number of dental hygienists' are now exposed to the care and maintenance of the implant supported prosthesis.

This one day comprehensive course is designed to familiarize the participant with possibilities of treatment options for edentulism using dental implants. This course is unique as it will include clinical observation of dental implant placement in various scenarios as well as periodontal assessment of the peri-implant tissue. It will also address maintenance protocols as it relates to peri-implant tissue assessment parameters, in-office armamentarium, and patient homecare strategies.
